"Recollections of their fathers by homosexual and heterosexual men," In Psychological Reports, volume 79.

A comparison study of homosexual and heterosexual men describing their recollection of their fathers was conducted at Marywood School of Social Work. The findings support earlier research which finds that, compared to heterosexual men, homosexual men recollect their fathers as more rejecting and less loving. A complete bibliography of earlier and most recent studies is included. This article should be of value to clinicians interested in the connection between family dynamics and homosexuality.
